
Wenjie Bian
College of Economics and Management, Fujian Agriculture and Forestry University, Fuzhou Fujian, 350002, China

Abstract. This paper discusses the influence of accounting information disclosure on investors' decision-making and corporate social responsibility. First of all, accounting information disclosure provides investors with important data about the financial situation and operating performance of enterprises, helping them to evaluate investment risks and returns. Secondly, disclosure also reflects the fulfillment of corporate social responsibilities, including charitable donations, environmental protection, employee benefits, etc. Transparency, timeliness and information quality help to build investors' trust and attract more investment. In addition, the disclosure of accounting information will help investors better understand the risks and opportunities of enterprises and help them formulate more sensible investment strategies.

Keywords: Corporate Social Responsibility Report; Accounting Information Disclosure; Investors' Decision-Making; Social Responsibility Fulfillment; Financial Situation.

1. Introduction

In today's competitive business environment, corporate social responsibility (CSR) has become one of the key factors for the success of enterprises. Enterprises are increasingly required not only to perform well at the financial level, but also to actively participate in social and environmental affairs. This trend has triggered investors' comprehensive evaluation of enterprises, paying attention not only to their financial situation, but also to the fulfillment of their social responsibilities. This paper will focus on the importance of accounting information disclosure in this context, and discuss the influence of accounting information disclosure in corporate social responsibility report on investors' decision-making. Accounting information disclosure not only provides key data about the financial situation of enterprises, but also reflects the performance of enterprises in fulfilling their social responsibilities through CSR reports. This kind of comprehensive information enables investors to evaluate the risks and opportunities of enterprises more comprehensively, so as to make investment decisions more wisely. The goal of this study is to deeply analyze how accounting information disclosure affects investors' decision-making process and emphasize its key role in investment evaluation. Through this study, we are expected to reveal the close relationship between accounting and social responsibility, provide more valuable information for investors and promote the sustainable development of corporate social responsibility.

2. Importance of Accounting Information Disclosure

In the modern business environment, accounting information disclosure, as an important aspect of enterprise finance and business activities, plays an extremely important role. Especially in the corporate social responsibility (CSR) report, accounting information disclosure has become more and more critical. This paper will discuss the importance of accounting information disclosure, emphasizing its role in CSR reporting. Accounting information disclosure is a process in which enterprises provide financial information and operating performance to external stakeholders. This information can include financial statements, management discussions and analysis, audit reports and other information about the financial situation. The importance of accounting information disclosure is manifested in many aspects.
Accounting information disclosure helps to provide transparency and comparability. Transparency is a key factor for investors, suppliers, customers and other stakeholders to evaluate enterprise performance and risks. By disclosing accurate and complete financial information, enterprises can build trust and help stakeholders better understand their financial situation [1]. Comparability enables the performance of different enterprises to be compared, which helps investors to make wise investment decisions. Accounting information disclosure helps to meet the requirements of laws and regulations. Many countries and regions require enterprises to report according to specific accounting standards and regulations. These regulations aim to protect the rights and interests of investors and other stakeholders and ensure the accuracy and transparency of financial information. Compliance with accounting information disclosure helps enterprises avoid legal proceedings and penalties and maintain a good reputation.

In addition, the disclosure of accounting information is very important for investors to make decisions. Investors need to know the financial situation and operating performance of the enterprise in detail to decide whether to invest or continue to invest. Accounting information disclosure provides investors with the information they need, enabling them to better evaluate the risks and returns of enterprises. Especially in CSR reports, accounting information disclosure can reflect the performance of enterprises in fulfilling their social and environmental responsibilities, which is particularly important for investors who are increasingly concerned about sustainability. Accounting information disclosure is also helpful for enterprises to manage themselves and make decisions. By monitoring financial performance and financial indicators, enterprises can identify problems in time and take corrective measures. In addition, the disclosure of accounting information can also provide management with important insights on business operations, which is helpful for making strategies and decisions.

Accounting information disclosure plays an irreplaceable role in modern business environment. It not only helps to meet the requirements of laws and regulations, but also provides investors with necessary information to help enterprises build trust, maintain their reputation and promote sustainable development. In CSR reports, accounting information disclosure plays a special role, reflecting the efforts of enterprises in fulfilling their social and environmental responsibilities, which is particularly important for attracting socially responsible investors. Therefore, enterprises should attach importance to and constantly improve their accounting information disclosure practice in order to achieve greater value and sustainability.

3. Correlation between Accounting Information Disclosure and Social Responsibility Performance

There is a close correlation between accounting information disclosure and corporate social responsibility (CSR) performance, which has attracted more and more attention in today's business environment. Accounting information disclosure not only provides information about the financial situation of enterprises, but also reflects the fulfillment of social and environmental responsibilities of enterprises. The following will discuss the relevance and importance of the two.

Accounting information disclosure provides transparency for corporate social responsibility [2]. In the financial statements and related documents of enterprises, accounting information discloses the financial status, operating performance and financial information related to social responsibility of enterprises. This includes corporate donations, charitable activities, and environmental protection expenditures. By disclosing this information, enterprises have demonstrated their efforts in social responsibility and conveyed their concerns about social and environmental issues to the outside world. Accounting information disclosure helps investors to evaluate the performance of corporate social responsibility. Investors pay more and more attention to corporate social and environmental responsibilities, because these factors can affect the long-term sustainability and reputation of enterprises. Through the disclosure of accounting information, investors can obtain quantitative and qualitative information about corporate social responsibility, so as to evaluate the risks and opportunities of enterprises more comprehensively. This helps them to make decisions that are in line with their values and investment.

In addition, the disclosure of accounting information can improve the transparency of corporate social responsibility. Transparency is one of the core principles of corporate social responsibility. By publicly disclosing information related to social responsibility, enterprises have demonstrated their willingness to accept public supervision and assume social responsibility. This transparency can enhance the reputation of enterprises, increase the trust of consumers and investors, and help to establish long-term and stable business relations. Accounting information disclosure can make enterprises pay more attention to social responsibility. Knowing that this information will be publicly disclosed, enterprises may take more active measures to improve their social and environmental performance. This kind of internal and external pressure is helpful to promote the development of enterprises in a more sustainable and socially responsible direction.

To sum up, there is a close relationship between accounting information disclosure and social responsibility performance. Accounting information disclosure provides a platform for enterprises to transparently demonstrate their social and environmental responsibilities, meet the needs of investors and stakeholders, improve transparency and urge enterprises to pay more attention to social responsibilities. Therefore, in the modern business environment, accounting information disclosure plays a key role in promoting social responsibility and sustainable development. Enterprises should realize the importance of this correlation and constantly improve their accounting information disclosure practice in order to achieve a higher level of social responsibility.

4. Accounting Information Disclosure from the Perspective of Investors

Investors pay close attention to the financial situation and operating performance of enterprises in the decision-making process, so accounting information disclosure is very important to meet the needs of investors. The following will discuss the accounting information disclosure from the perspective of investors in order to understand its importance in investment decision-making.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Elements of accounting information disclosure</th>
<th>describe</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>financial statements</td>
<td>Including balance sheet, income statement, etc., to provide basic data of enterprise's financial status and operating performance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>management discussion and analysis</td>
<td>The management's explanation and analysis of the financial situation and operating performance provide a deeper understanding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>audit report</td>
<td>The results of independent audit of financial statements by external auditors have increased the credibility of information</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corporate social responsibility information</td>
<td>Reveal the performance of enterprises in social and environmental responsibilities, including donation, environmental protection, employee welfare, etc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Future prospects and risks</td>
<td>The disclosure of enterprise's future outlook and possible risks helps investors to better evaluate long-term value</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

When studying and analyzing potential investment opportunities, investors usually pay attention to the financial statements of enterprises first. Financial statements provide the core financial information of an enterprise, such as assets, liabilities, shareholders' equity, profits and losses. These data help investors to understand the financial situation, solvency and profitability of enterprises. The data in financial statements are also used to calculate various financial indicators, such as ratio analysis and trend analysis, to help investors evaluate the performance of enterprises. In addition, management discussion and analysis are a part of investors' great concern [3]. In this part, the management provided the explanation and analysis of financial statements, including the key factors of business performance, strategic plan and future outlook. This will help investors to understand the strategic direction and decision-making process of the enterprise more deeply, so as to better judge its long-term value. The audit report of the external auditor is also very important to investors. The audit report confirms the credibility and accuracy of the financial statements and provides investors with additional confidence. Financial information without audit report may be suspected, while information with audit report is more acceptable to the market.

From the perspective of investors, the disclosure of corporate social responsibility information also occupies an important position. Investors pay more and more attention to corporate social and environmental responsibilities, because these factors can have an impact on the long-term sustainability of enterprises. Accounting information disclosure can provide information related to social responsibility, such as donations, environmental protection measures, employee benefits, etc. This information enables investors to assess the sustainability and social responsibility of enterprises, and helps them to make investment decisions in line with their own values. Investors also need to know the future prospects and possible risks of the enterprise. The information in accounting information disclosure should include the enterprise's plans and prospects for the future, and also disclose the risk factors that may affect the future performance of the enterprise. This helps investors to better evaluate the long-term prospects of investment.

In short, the disclosure of accounting information from the perspective of investors is very important for investment decision-making. Investors need comprehensive and reliable information to evaluate the financial status, performance, social responsibility performance and risks of enterprises. Therefore, enterprises should pay attention to the quality and transparency of accounting information disclosure in order to meet the needs of investors, build trust and attract more investment.

5. The Influence of Accounting Information Disclosure on Investors' Decision-making

Accounting information disclosure plays a vital role in investors' decision-making, which not only provides information about the financial situation and operating performance of enterprises, but also reflects the fulfillment of corporate social responsibility. The following will discuss the influence of accounting information disclosure on investors' decision-making, and how it shapes investors' views and decisions.

Accounting information disclosure provides investors with key data about the financial situation of enterprises. The information contained in financial statements, such as balance sheet, income statement and cash flow statement, helps investors understand the assets, liabilities, profitability and cash flow of enterprises. These data are the basis for investors to evaluate the health and profit potential of enterprises. For example, investors can analyze financial statements to calculate various financial ratios, such as debt ratio, gross profit margin and ROE (Return on Shareholders' Equity), to measure the financial performance of enterprises. Accounting information disclosure provides information about corporate social responsibility [4]. In modern society, investors not only care about the financial performance of enterprises, but also pay attention to their social and environmental responsibilities. Accounting information disclosure can include information about corporate donations, charitable activities, environmental protection measures, employee welfare and social participation. These data help investors to evaluate whether enterprises actively fulfill their social responsibilities and their performance in sustainability and ethical management.

The transparency and timeliness of accounting information disclosure also have an important impact on investors' decision-making. Transparency refers to the clarity and readability of information, while timeliness refers to the time when information is released. Transparent and timely disclosure of accounting information helps investors to obtain and analyze information more quickly, so as to make decisions more quickly. For example, when the market fluctuates violently, investors need timely financial information to adjust their investment portfolio to reduce risks. Accounting information disclosure can also affect investors' trust and confidence. Investors are usually more willing to invest in companies that provide transparent, reliable and detailed information. If the accounting information disclosure of enterprises is inconsistent or opaque, investors may be skeptical and even choose to avoid investment. Therefore, high-quality accounting information disclosure helps to establish and maintain investors' trust and attract more investment.

Investors need to consider risk and return comprehensively when making investment decisions, and accounting information disclosure provides them with a key source of information. Knowing the financial situation of an enterprise can help investors to evaluate its financial stability and profit potential, so as to better understand the potential investment risks. At the same time, through the disclosure of social responsibility, investors can evaluate whether the enterprise faces reputation risk, legal risk or supply chain risk. This enables them to identify and manage potential investment risks more comprehensively and formulate more targeted investment strategies. In addition, the disclosure of accounting information also helps investors to find potential investment opportunities. They can look for companies that have performed well in social responsibility, because these companies are usually more sustainable and have long-term value. Enterprises investing in sustainable development may get higher returns in the future, because social and market trends are increasingly supporting sustainability.

Accounting information disclosure has a far-reaching impact on investors' decision-making. It provides key financial and social responsibility information to help investors evaluate the financial situation, social responsibility performance and risk factors of enterprises. Transparency, timeliness and information quality also play a key role in shaping investors' trust and confidence. Therefore, enterprises should pay attention to and continuously improve their accounting information disclosure practice to meet the needs of investors, promote sustainable development and attract more investment.

6. Promoting the Sustainable Development of Corporate Social Responsibility

Corporate social responsibility (CSR) has become one of the key factors for the success of modern enterprises. At the same time, accounting information disclosure plays a vital role in promoting the sustainable development of corporate social responsibility. This section will discuss how to promote the sustainable development of corporate social responsibility through accounting information disclosure in order to realize long-term economic, social and environmental benefits.

The disclosure of accounting information provides the transparency of corporate social responsibility. By transparently disclosing information related to social responsibility, such as charitable donations, environmental protection measures, employee welfare and community participation, enterprises show their social and environmental efforts to external stakeholders. This transparency helps to build trust, enhance the confidence of stakeholders in enterprises, and encourage more socially responsible investment [5]. The disclosure of accounting information is helpful to supervise and evaluate the performance of corporate social responsibility. Investors, consumers, governments and non-governmental organizations and other stakeholders can evaluate their social responsibility performance by analyzing the accounting information disclosure of enterprises. This supervisory role forces enterprises to actively fulfill their social responsibilities in order to avoid negative reputation risks and legal responsibilities. Investors pay special attention to the fulfillment of corporate social responsibility, because it can affect the sustainability and long-term value of enterprises.

Accounting information disclosure is helpful for enterprises to manage social responsibility risks. By timely disclosing information related to social responsibility, enterprises can identify and manage potential risk factors. For example, enterprises may disclose information related to social responsibility issues of supply chain, such as labor issues or environmental issues. This enables enterprises to take measures to reduce risks, improve supply chain management and ensure compliance with social responsibility standards. Accounting information disclosure is also helpful for enterprises to improve their social responsibility performance. Once an enterprise publicly discloses its social responsibility objectives and performance data, it will face the supervision and pressure from stakeholders and encourage enterprises to take positive social responsibility measures. Enterprises may formulate strategies to improve their social and environmental performance, thus meeting the expectations of investors and consumers and enhancing their competitiveness.
Establishing and maintaining high-quality accounting information disclosure practice is the key for enterprises to realize the sustainable development of social responsibility. The improvement of transparency and credibility helps to build the reputation of enterprises, which is essential to attract investment and consumers. With the society's increasing concern about sustainability and social responsibility, it will be beneficial for enterprises to incorporate accounting information disclosure into their core strategy and social responsibility into their business philosophy to maintain their competitiveness in the long run. High-quality disclosure practice will help enterprises better meet social expectations, establish long-term and stable business relations, and make positive contributions to the sustainable development of society, environment and economy. Therefore, enterprises should realize the importance of accounting information disclosure to realize the sustainable development of social responsibility, and constantly improve and perfect their disclosure practice to achieve a more sustainable future.

To sum up, accounting information disclosure plays a key role in promoting the sustainable development of corporate social responsibility. Transparency, supervision, risk management and performance improvement are all positive effects of accounting information disclosure on social responsibility. Enterprises should realize the importance of their social responsibility and constantly improve their accounting information disclosure practice in order to achieve a higher level of social responsibility performance and sustainable development. In this way, enterprises can achieve long-term success in economy, society and environment.

7. Conclusion

Accounting information disclosure is not only the presentation of financial data, but also the mirror image of corporate social responsibility. This paper deeply discusses how accounting information disclosure plays a key role in promoting the sustainable development of corporate social responsibility. Through transparency, supervision, risk management and performance improvement, accounting information disclosure not only provides comprehensive information for external stakeholders, but also promotes enterprises to fulfill their social responsibilities more actively. This kind of efforts to actively fulfill social responsibilities will help to establish and maintain the reputation of enterprises, attract more investment and consumers, and realize long-term economic and social sustainable development. Therefore, enterprises should regard accounting information disclosure as a key tool to enhance social responsibility, and continuously improve its disclosure practice, so as to create more value, build a more sustainable future and contribute to the common prosperity of society, environment and economy. With joint efforts, we can achieve a more sustainable and socially responsible business model and benefit the society.

References